A lounging bronze crocodile, an oversized leather bandage, an animated rat singing Bruce Springsteen: Peter Wächtler’s practice oscillates between the prosaic and the outlandish. The artist’s fascination with pop culture—“I am attracted to bestsellers, page-turners, tearjerkers, blockbusters,” he has written—is grounded in his attention to the casual failings of everyday life. His works are neither ironic nor sentimental: though composed of familiar elements and executed in earnest, they acknowledge a limit to their ability to communicate, often to comedic effect.

Wächtler is a prodigious writer, and these texts inform the rest of his practice, which also includes drawings, sculptures, and film. The tales he spins—whether embodied in an object or relayed in prose or moving image—feature protagonists mired in various degrees of disquiet, melancholy, and ineptitude. Repetition is a key element, representing ongoing attempts by the characters, narrator, or even the artist himself to overcome the gap between intention and affect. The sympathy of the artist for his subjects and their travails is underscored by a homespun, heartfelt aesthetic.

At the Renaissance Society, Wächtler presents a new body of work, including watercolors and large-scale bronze figures. Secrets of a Trumpet is the Brussels-based artist’s first solo museum exhibition in the United States.

What we understand to be true is continually honed by the dialectic between skepticism and certainty. Doubt can be an essential epistemological method for identifying new avenues of inquiry, opening space for the germination of novel forms and concepts. At the same time, doubt also eats away at the foundation of understanding itself, calling into question the very possibility of knowledge.

Between the Ticks of the Watch presents a platform for considering doubt as both a state of mind and pragmatic tool. Rather than defining the concept, the exhibition traces how uncertainty manifests itself. In different ways, the artworks presented and accompanying program of talks and screenings offer glimpses of how the condition of doubt permeates questions of scientific verification, identity, construction of language, and broader philosophical concerns.

Kevin Beasley presents a new installation featuring objects comprised of gas masks and megaphones: these hybrids are poised both to defend against and to facilitate expressions of power. Here, they lay on the floor, ready to be activated in situations of conflict.

Peter Downsbrough’s works are marked by an investigation into the spatial possibilities of language and the linguistic possibilities of space. His spare installations use lines to structure and divide and treat words as objects which are frequently split, mirrored, or otherwise manipulated.

The collaged drawings of Goutam Ghosh appear to have been paused mid-execution; often structured by an underlying grid, the remaining empty space lingers uncertainly between inception and completion.

The value in mathematics (language), a recent video by Falke Pisano, centers on a conversation between the artist and two ethnomathematicians as they discuss how qualitative interpretations can undermine what are otherwise considered to be objective truths.

With a biting playfulness, Martha Wilson combines photography and text to stage acts of self-questioning, using her own shifting appearance to explore the fluidity of identity and its representations.

Art historian Richard Shiff’s 2008 book Doubt (Routledge) considers the tensions that arise between practicing art and practicing criticism, which he identifies as the difference between intuition and reason. He cites uncertainty not as a retreat to relativism, but as a critical tool for thinking clearly about art and art history. Criticism is enhanced when it borrows some of art’s intuitive doubt. In this talk, he expands his argument to consider the work in the Renaissance Society’s exhibition.

ON DOUBT

THU, MAY 05, 7PM

James Conant is a philosopher who has written extensively on the philosophy of language, ethics, and metaphilosophy. He recently co-edited Varieties of Skepticism: Essays after Kant, Wittgenstein, and Cavell (Walter de Gruyter, Berlin, 2014), and in this talk he discusses the different ways in which doubt has been understood historically and in contemporary philosophy.

SHADI BARTSCH-ZIMMER AND ROBERT J. RICHARDS

Shadi Bartsch-Zimmer, Professor of Classics and Gender Studies and Director of the Stevanovich Institute on the Formation of Knowledge at the University of Chicago, and Robert J. Richards, Professor of the History of Science and Medicine at the University of Chicago, discuss the value of doubting our assumptions about sex, science, and democracy.

Presented in partnership with the Stevanovich Institute on the Formation of Knowledge.
This documentary follows Pug, a 13-year-old boy from Baltimore’s Westside who yearns to join the urban dirt bike riders known as the 12 O’Clock Boys: young African American men who tear around the city, popping wheelies and weaving through traffic. As his fascination grows, it begins to eclipse everything else in his life.

These artist works explore how uncertainty affects the personal, the political, and the social. Phil Collins’ marxism today (prologue) follows the fortunes of former teachers of Marxism-Leninism in Communist East Germany; The Role of a Lifetime by Deimantas Narkevičius considers the ethical responsibilities of the artist and the impossibility of objectivity; and in The Amateurist Miranda July portrays a woman on the brink of a technologically-driven madness.

Artist Sadie Benning’s experimental live-action cartoon uses masks, animation, subtitles, drawings, and dramatic scenes to investigate the psychic life of an androgynous eleven-year-old. Growing up in a working class neighborhood with her single mother and gay roommate, the protagonist confronts the loneliness of living between masculine and feminine in a culture obsessed with defining gender difference.

Presented in partnership with Doc Films.

CONCERT

SOUTH/NORTH,
FEATURING MESIAS MAIGUASHCA
WED, FEB 24, 8PM
BOND CHAPEL, 1050 E 59TH ST

Ecuadorian native Mesias Maiguashca has been established in Germany as a composer and teacher for more than five decades. Born to indigenous parents and a former student of Stockhausen, his musical language reflects the profound impact that the Andean folklore of his youth and the rigor of the European avant-garde have had on his perception of sound. This concert features the premiere of a composition by Maiguashca along with works by Mauricio Kagel, Helmut Lachenmann, and Chicago-based Ecuadorian composer Juan Campoverde.

Presented in partnership with the Frequency Series and Fonema Consort with support from Goethe-Institut.
