In a 2013 interview, Ben Rivers described being driven by “a desire to make cinema that is not a representation of the world, but that comes from actual people and places—and is then transformed through cinema into something that isn’t the world, it’s new.”

Explorations of community, landscape, freedom, and flux are at the center of this London-based artist’s practice. Working with both feature-length and short formats, Rivers draws on elements of documentary and fiction, experimental film and mainstream cinema.

Urth, Rivers’s first solo presentation in the United States, presents new and recent moving image works. The exhibition takes its title from the Old Norse word suggesting the twisted threads of fate (as cited by Timothy Morton in his recent book, Dark Ecology). The films in the exhibition share an interest in utopias—in particular, the tension between a yearning for an idealized world and the impossibility of such a place. For Rivers, utopias are necessarily hermetic and subjective spaces, conditions that are reflected in the settings of these works.

The Renaissance Society commissioned Rivers to produce a new project for this exhibition. Filmed inside Biosphere 2 in Arizona, it forms a cinematic meditation on ambitious experiments, constructed environments, and visions of the future. Writer Mark von Schlegell contributes a text—read as voiceover to Rivers’s moving images—that considers what an endeavor such as Biosphere 2 might mean today in terms of human-kind’s relationship with the natural world.

Two previous films by Rivers, presented alongside Urth, explore similarly curious objects and places. Slow Action (2010) offers a fictional study of island biogeography across four locations, considering how these self-contained sites have and might continue to evolve. The accompanying quasi-ethnographic narrative, also written by von Schlegell, imagines future societies grappling with rising seas and soon-to-be-lost ecologies. Things (2014) is a film collage divided into four “seasons,” juxtaposing found imagery, objects, and sounds with domestic and nature scenes that are at once intimate and unsettling. It is presented alongside a series of drawings and photographs.

SAT, SEP 10, 5–8PM
Opening reception
with artist talk at 6pm
Starring musician Robert A.A. Lowe, A Spell... follows an unnamed character through three seemingly disparate moments in his life: in the midst of a 15-person collective on a small Estonian island; in isolation in the majestic wilderness of Northern Finland; and during a black metal concert in Norway. Marked by solitude, ecstatic beauty, and an optimism of the darkest sort, this hypnotic film is at once a document of experience and an experience itself, an inquiry into transcendence that sees the cinema as a site for transformation.

Dir. Ben Rivers and Ben Russell, 2013, 98m, DCP

Rivers's most recent feature film takes Paul Bowles's 1947 short story “A Distant Episode” as its starting point, combining elements of the unsettling tale with observational footage to create a surreal fable on the illusions and ethics of cinema. Shooting in 16mm against Morocco's Atlas Mountains and Sahara Desert, Rivers tracks real film director Oliver Laxe who, abandoning his own set and crew, begins to descend into the misadventures and madness of Bowles's protagonist.

Dir. Ben Rivers, 2015, 98m, 35mm, in Arabic/Spanish/French with English subtitles

In Urth, Ben Rivers partially draws on the work of philosopher Timothy Morton, who offers vivid new perspectives on ecological thinking, our uncanny interconnectedness with the nonhuman, and the future to come. In his latest book, Dark Ecology (2016), Morton describes an emerging ecological awareness that has all the darkness—and the strange twists and turns--of a noir story: the detective is also the criminal, investigating forces on a planetary scale while realizing he or she is implicated in them.

Robert A.A. Lowe, who performs under his own name or as Lichens, uses his voice and modular synthesizers to create immersive listening experiences. In his mesmerizing performances, layered vocals join other sounds to form a reverberating drone. Lowe collaborated with Ben Rivers and Ben Russell on the film A Spell to Ward Off the Darkness, acting in the central role as the unnamed protagonist. A onetime Chicagoan, now based in Brooklyn, Lowe has worked with a wide range of artists and musicians, and he also plays with the experimental metal band Om.
Sadie Benning’s paintings feature a combination of materials and colors in highly structured, cut-out compositions. Their lively forms convey a fluid spectrum of possibilities ranging from geometric elements to more figural concerns. The handmade quality of Benning’s works evokes a sense of improvisation as well as an experiential aspect, in which the use of the materials visibly reveals a conversational thinking process.

At the Renaissance Society, Benning presents a new series of paintings inspired by Blinky Palermo’s 1976 work To the People of New York City. The paintings in Shared Eye work within the parameters set forth by the structure and progression of Palermo’s installation, in which thirty-nine chromatic panels appear in a sequence of linear groupings.

Diverging from Palermo’s minimal compositions of red, black, and yellow, however, the works in Shared Eye deftly incorporate photographic imagery. In each case, Benning begins with a digital image, transferred onto the support, and punctuates it with found photographs, objects, and areas of color, generating potential associations between the individual elements. These collage-like techniques create a variety of formal tensions and invite the viewer to draw from their own reference points, whether the works evoke experiences of city life or the haunting presence of historical traumas.

The precise medium of the works, their materials, and how they are made, are difficult to identify at first; they tacitly embrace a questioning of categories. In both form and content, the paintings embody the possibility of destabilizing fixed logics, and they suggest how ambiguity or indeterminacy can assume a political dimension.

Christine Mehring, Department Chair and Professor of Art History at the University of Chicago, is the author of Blinky Palermo: Abstraction of an Era (2008), an in-depth historical study of Palermo’s practice and its significance for post-war art. Guiding viewers through Shared Eye, Mehring offers her knowledge of Palermo’s work and explores how it is a touchstone for artists today, including Benning, who are considering the possibilities of abstraction and formal structure.

In both form and content, Sadie Benning’s works often suggest how indeterminacy can take on a political dimension. A number of artists and writers have been invited to send in short written responses to these ideas. This performative reading of the texts in the gallery stages a polyphony of sorts, as different voices rise up within the exhibition. Visit the Renaissance Society website to view a list of participants.

Blinky Palermo’s To the People of New York City was acquired by the Dia Foundation soon after the artist’s unexpected death in 1977. Lynne Cooke, a former curator at Dia, now Senior Curator at the National Gallery of Art, has long been an advocate of Palermo’s work, editing a book about To the People of New York City and organizing the German painter’s first North American retrospective. Here, Cooke discusses Palermo’s ambitious final project in relation to Shared Eye.

CHICAGO, IL 60608

The Renaissance Society is at its core a space of possibility.

Our commitment to facilitating the creation of new works of art would not be possible without your contribution. All of this evening’s proceeds benefit the Renaissance Society’s 2016-17 exhibition, education, and publishing programs.

RenBen 2016 features silent and live auctions with works by artists including Will Benedict, Francis Upritchard, Stewart Uoo, Edgar Arceneaux, Becky Beasley and Peter Wächtler. An Italian-inspired three-course meal comes courtesy of Chef Giuseppe Tentori of Boka Restaurant Group.

We have partnered with online auction house Paddle8 to host a preview of the artworks, which will be live on September 23. Bidding will also be available through the site from September 30.

Individual tickets: $500 each

Tables for ten: from $5,000

In January 2017, the Renaissance Society will launch a new programming series devoted to ephemeral or performance-based projects in the open gallery space. Presenting two major live works every year, in the period between exhibitions, this program creates a recurring platform for works with a live component and a shorter, concentrated duration.

The Intermissions series aims to expand the Renaissance Society’s support for artists as they explore new ideas and to further develop spaces for experimentation. The program will encompass a wide range of time-based practices, potentially including performance, participatory experiences, live media projects, and sound- or dance-centered works.

Details of the first Intermissions event will be available from early December. Visit our website, join our email list, or follow us on social media for more information.

Generous support for this program is provided by the Efroymson Family Fund.

GABRIEL SIERRA
Sierra’s 2015 site-specific exhibition featured eight titles that changed hourly, introducing different logics to the space of the gallery. These phrases also alternate as titles for the catalogue, which each copy featuring one of them. The book includes essays by Douglas Fogle and Irene V. Small; an interview between Sierra and curator Solveig Øvstebø; and installation images from the exhibition.

IRENA HAIDUK
SEDUCTIVE EXACTING REALISM
MARCEL PROUST 12

The catalogue for Haiduk’s 2015 exhibition appears to replicate the missing book from a 13-volume edition of Proust’s collected works owned by the artist. The publication features texts by Ivo Andrić, Hannah Feldman, Irena Haiduk, Monika Szewczyk, and Marina Vishmidt, as well as an interview between the artist and curator Solveig Øvstebø.

Available Fall 2016

MATHIAS POLEDNA

Featuring essays by Solveig Øvstebø, Amy Knight Powell, Bennett Simpson, and Andrew Stefan Weiner, this catalogue also includes documentation of Poledna’s 2014 exhibition. The artist proposed iconoclasm and its various historical contexts as a conceptual backdrop for two new works: a 35mm film and a substantial alteration to the Renaissance Society’s exhibition space.

Available Fall 2016

BEN RIVERS
WAYS OF WORLDMAKING

Rivers’s first monograph offers a comprehensive overview of his practice. Co-published by Kunstverein in Hamburg, the Renaissance Society, Camden Arts Centre, and Triennale di Milano, it includes new essays by Melissa Gronlund, Ed Halter, and Andrea Picard, alongside extensive images from Rivers’s films and a number of texts that have influenced the works.
